A: I think there's a missing file icon in the download window of utorrent, I'm not sure if that's important but if it is, try this: Select the downloaded file Go to settings Click general and open the download window Try right clicking on the file icon (the one with the blue ball on it) Select "Add custom icon" Enter.torrent in the popup and the actual file name Click ok It worked for me and the download window now has that icon. Q: Can I make a uniquely-named table in MySQL? I am designing an application on a "client/server" type of architecture. There's only going to be two types of clients, and they'll all run the same application. Therefore, I want to avoid having two tables in the MySQL database. Here's a diagram of the application: Database Table Diagram So as you can see, I don't want the users to be able to insert data into "client_data" table that might be duplicated, because that would result in data corruption. I'd rather have two tables - "user_data" and "client_data". I know this is a contrived example, but just thought of a situation where I'd need to do this. A: What you want to do is called "normalization" and is a very common approach for database design. Normalization aims to keep your database well-structured and safe. In your case, you would create a unique table for each client, and only store client-specific data in it. You wouldn't store client-specific data in the "user_data" table, you would store that data in a "client_data" table. This practice of "normalizing" your database makes it safe, highly performant, and easy to work with. As you can see in the image, a "client_data" table is linked to the "user_data" table, so you would be able to always retrieve client-specific data from the "client_data" table for any given client. A: You may want to look at storing data in different tables based on the client. This allows you to normalise the clients but ensure that they can't share data and this would also be a very good way of building your application in a scalable manner. See
