Wisata Perjalanan Indonesia A: You should use the php://input stream wrapper. In the example below I have created a file, no headers, no content length, made it blank and also a 2 byte header to test with. I have used your code for $payload = file_get_contents(...) and I've added a second line of $webpage = file_get_contents(...) to use. As you can see, the $webpage already has the headers from the example, except for the content-length of the header, which is in the 2 byte var $header. The difference here is that the header is enclosed in the $webpage variable, and the $payload variable does not. (the $webpage contains it). You can try to change the payload size of $payload and see if it changes the behaviour of the headers. //open a file to write to $handle = fopen("tmp/test.php", "w"); //create and header $header = "HTTP/1.1 200 OK\r Content-Length:2\r "; fwrite($handle, $header); //create and paypal signature $payload = "You have 8 seconds to pay"; fwrite($handle, $payload); //write to stream fwrite($handle, $webpage); //close file fclose($handle); //read the file and print headers to show that the $webpage already has the headers from the example, except for the content-length of the header, which is in the 2 byte var $header. //insert the file we have created into a string $data = file_get_contents('tmp/test.php'); //print out $data contents and headers. print_r($data); //I am sending the headers and payload in one fread() call $data = fread($handle, 1048576); //print out $data contents and headers print_r($data); file_put_contents('tmp/test.php', $data); EDIT: (or not) To elaborate a bit more on what I mean by "the $webpage already has the headers from the example": In the example above, file_get
